

Harry Ferguson

Harry Ferguson is Professor of Social Work at the University of Nottingham and is a qualified social worker.

He has practiced, taught, researched and published extensively in the areas of social work and child protection and how professionals work with families in general.

His current research includes a study of how social workers actually perform child protection work on home visits and in other places, like the car. His most recent book is Child Protection Practice (Palgrave, 2011), which in addition to the conventional paperback format has also been published in audio format with the aim of making it accessible to busy professionals to listen to in the car, at the desk and so on (see www.audible.co.uk).